"Stravinsky" has a rich and highly interactive feel to it. Despite being well over three minutes long, there is enough information to keep the player occupied throughout. I did put a little bit of extra reverb on the slap for a little more punch. My favorite part of this instrument is that it has an easy-to-use and intuitive interface, with various parameters for attack, decay, sustain, and release. There are also effects like the 12th-order high-pass filter, low-pass filter, delay, and others. My inspiration for "Nächster Graf" was the sonority of the cello (most cellos do not have much in the way of body compared to the double bass). I wanted to make sure this piece had a way to segue into other pieces, so I included a cello sample. The cello sample is very short, and I included the double bass sample as well. The "effect" is the overdrive from the kick, which is probably the most obvious difference between this instrument and the previous one. I removed the reverb from the cello and added some high-pass filter. The bass has an easy-to-use interface, and there are a lot of parameters to change. My favorite part of this instrument is the "Arpeggi" function that allows you to "play" the instrument with the left hand. I put a nice little right-hand break to help separate the two sounds. I wanted to make sure that all of the extremes of the double bass sound like the double bass, and not like a cello. This required me to put the double bass sample in the middle of the track and have all of the other 82157476af
