slumdog millionaire (2008) ...

(Focus on class structure in India)

British-born, Hollywood director, Danny Boyle makes a movie about Jamal Malik (Dev Patel), a poor young man in India who plays "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" and correctly answers all the questions because his life experience has perfectly prepared him for this game. But Prem, the game-show host (Anil Kapoor), thinks Jamal is cheating and uses the police to torture the 15-year-old player. To show us how Jamal really knows the answers, the story flashes back to his childhood in the slums of Mumbai, where he, his brother, and a mysterious young woman grow up and try to find a better life. Winner of 8 Academy Awards. Rated R (20 min). movie200

'. It takes him 12 years to solve the question. Director Danny Boyle, the same who directed Slumdog Millionaire, the Academy Award winning movie, worked on this movie. This movie has many of the same elements that gave Slumdog Millionaire an Academy Award, including a supporting character played by the late Ben Kingsley who also starred in the Oscar winning film. It is now in its fourth release, as it has made its way through the DVD market. The dialogue in this movie is very witty, and it is easy to imagine many of these conversations occurring in a real-life scenario. This movie has many of the elements that make it so funny, like Ben Kingsley's character in Slumdog Millionaire who steals the show. The journey Jamal makes from getting his first cup of tea to winning the prize of 500,000 rupees. The journey has many famous people along for the ride, and they all contribute to Jamal's success, including a mother-daughter duo who crack the game's final question. One of the reasons that this movie is so good is because the audience is exposed to a different culture of the world. Every culture has its own problems and at the same time has its own set of unique values. The way that Jamal's and Aisha's lives are portrayed in the movie shows that they have no concept of good and evil. They don't even understand the difference. By the end of the movie, Jamal has found this out, and he begins to respect what is right and wrong. The humour used in this movie is quite over the top. Some of the funniest moments are when Jamal asks Aisha if she wants to go on a date with him. This is so off the wall that the audience cannot help but laugh. Also, when Jamal's sister gets breast cancer, the way that the movie portrays this has a comedic touch as well. The comedic touch is a huge part of this movie as it helps to explain the real world of these characters. The story of Jamal's journey to winning the prize is beautifully told. The beginning of the story is set to Jamal's life in India. This section of the movie is similar to the beginning of the movie Slumdog Millionaire, because it begins in poverty. In both movies the poverty begins with the appearance of Jamal and Aisha, and the poverty does not end with their final appearance. The poverty in this movie is evident when Jamal takes the taxi for the first time in his life. The poverty 82157476af
